

Local Hospice and Euthanasia Veterinarian Featured in New Yorker.

Dr. Jessamyn Kennedy talks with author and palliative care Director, Sunita Puri.

For Immediate Release

Wareham, MA - July 2026

Dr. Jessamyn Kennedy, Wareham resident and trusted local hospice and euthanasia veterinarian, was featured in a recent New Yorker article that covered the rising popularity of pet hospice.

Dr. Sunita Puri, the Director of the Inpatient Palliative Care Service at the University of California, Irvine, where she is also an associate professor of medicine, interviewed Kennedy and accompanied her on several pet hospice and euthanasia visits. Puri was interested in how similar or different the process was for a human and their furry family member from the experience of human family members. The result is a New Yorker weekend essay.

[<https://www.newyorker.com/culture/the-weekend-essay/when-should-you-say-goodbye-to-a-pet>]

Kennedy has served as a trusted local clinic and surgical vet on the South Shore and the upper Cape since 2012. In 2017, she began offering her supportive, at-home hospice/palliative and euthanasia services for those whose beloved pets have come to the end of their lives.

About Peaceful Shores Veterinary Hospice

Serving Wareham, southern Plymouth County, and Upper Cape Cod, Peaceful Shores Veterinary Hospice offers a gentle, kind, safe, loving, and compassionate way to say goodbye to beloved pets. For more information, visit Peaceful Shores Veterinary Hospice at <https://peacefulshoresvethospice.com/>.

###

Media Contact

Dr. Jessamyn Kennedy
Dr.Jessamyn@gmail.com
Mobile: (774)-775-2727